FEATURED ARTICLE:

"Why Legislators Respond to You"

The number one question that everyone asks about legislators is: "Why should they listen to me?" You may wonder what chance you have to make your voice heard in the legislative process when there are so many powerful people out there trying to get elected officials to do things for them. As grass roots organizations and social justice movements have successfully shown time and again, legislators can be forced to pay attention to the people that they represent for several key reasons:

- You vote ...
- You can mobilize ...
- You have strength in numbers ...
- You have a broad geographic presence ...
- You have powerful stories ...
- You asked ...

Ask Dave

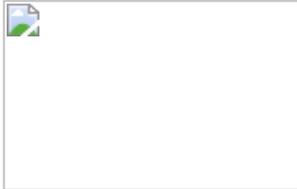

Q: The idea of meeting with state legislators is intimidating to some people. How do you have comfortable and successful meetings with legislators?

A: If you are feeling intimidated, that's probably because they look at legislators as "big shots," people who are too important to listen to you. The truth is legislators are people just like everyone else. They love to be loved, and hate to be hated. Here are some basic tips for having your meetings with your state representatives go well: ...
